EARTH TALK

From the Editors of E/The Environmental Magazine

Given the multi-year droughts facing the American West, how are groundwater levels there holding up?
- Charles T. East Williston NY

Groundwater levels are the level of the water table below underground aquifers and are crucial to water security. In dry states like California, 40 percent of water is from groundwater; during droughts, this rises to around 60 percent. Due to this dependence and the declining water levels of surface reservoirs, such as Lake Mead (currently at 19 percent capacity), groundwater in the American West is being over-exploited, particularly in regions like the San Joaquin Valley in California's Central Valley and the Ogallala Aquifer beneath the Great Plains in the Midwest.

Groundwater recharge is slow already, and drastically worsens during drought. Aquifers recharge even in non-drought years at the rate of just inches per day, so years of overuse and additional reliance will deplete them very quickly. In addition to the multi-year-long drought, several other factors contribute to the depletion of groundwater levels.

Agriculture needs water to irrigate; but drought has reduced irrigation to just 20 percent of normal levels in California, and farmers have had to overuse underground aquifers. And due to global warming, snowpack, which provides up to 80 percent of California's water, melts sooner and faster. Late January levels hover at 25% of the usual level, reducing the critical transfer to the underground aquifers.

The good news is that 2023 marked the end of a four-year drought in California, and underground aquifers in the San Joaquin Valley were recharged 7.6 million acre-feet, marking a 17 percent increase compared to 2017's recharge levels. Governor Gavin Newsom acknowledged this in his 2022 Water Supply Strategy, stating, "increase average recharge by half a million acre-feet a year." With increasing attention to groundwater levels by policymakers, it's essential to acknowledge that an additional 3.5 million acre-feet of water could have been stored in the underground aquifers of the San Joaquin Valley if it had been captured through catchments or dams.

Despite Newsom's 2022 Water Supply Strategy aiming to foster sustainable and reliable water usage and the end of the multi-year drought in 2023, there remains a need to intensify efforts and research into American West groundwater levels for water security. Readers can help address groundwater shortages by advocating for smarter water management policies, volunteering with local groups that educate the public on water usage, and engaging with reputable water education networks that advise on global water governance.

Newest Reviews:

It was effortless working with Patti. From the start she took care of all the things that google mentions and the ones that it does not. From the house photos, to open houses, managing offers, dealings with the buyer, the attorneys, insights into showcasing the house, advising and assisting on fixing things that'd make a difference, she was on top of things and made it look effortless.

All in all, she was amazing and have nothing but gratitude in our hearts for hand holding us during such big change in our lives.
- A. Puri

We had a great experience with Patti as our agent. Patti was a great help, she has a ton of experience and knows how to drive a sale to completion! She responds quickly and listens to the customer, but gives her own insights and advice from her wealth of experience. She has decades of experience in the New Hyde Park area. She was great to work with, we appreciate all her help and expertise!

RECIPE OF THE WEEK

Apple Spice Cake

- 2 apples
- 3 tbsp brown sugar
- 1 tbsp cinnamon
- 1 tbsp flour (optional)
- 1 box spice cake mix
- 1 stick butter, melted
- 4 eggs
- 1 cup milk

Glaze:

- 1 1/2 cups powdered sugar
- 2-3 tbsp milk
- 1 cup chopped pecans

Heat oven to 350 F.

Peel, core and chop apples into bite-sized pieces. In bowl, mix apples with brown sugar, cinnamon and flour, if desired, which helps keep apples from sinking to bottom. Set aside.

In large mixing bowl, mix spice cake mix, butter, eggs and milk. Mix in apples and pour into 9-by-13-inch pan. Bake 30-35 minutes, or until toothpick inserted in center comes out clean. Let cool.

To make glaze: Mix powdered sugar and milk; pour over cooled cake. Top with pecans.
